MONTPELIER

Board of Trade Still Active for a New Opera House.

Steps were taken last evening at the regular meeting of the Board of Trade toward the erection of an opera house in this city, the committee which has the matter in charge being instructed to continue their investigation to select a site and secure an option on any property which may appeal to them as desirable for the location of a theatre. Once an option is secured, the board considers it probably that decisive action can be made toward raising money to build a theatre. A special committee consisting of Secretary H. A. Flint, J. B. Estee, George Bailey and Frank W. Mitchell was appointed to arrange for a series of automobile trips to be made by the civic organization through surrounding towns. If possible, three trips will be made during the summer, the first sometime next month. A committee was also instructed to inquire of the city council as to what has been done toward better lighting for the business section of Montpelier.

WASHING GARDEN PRODUCE.

Different Vegetables Need Very Different Treatment.

The utmost care should be taken in washing lettuce, radishes, celery, parsley, spinach, asparagus and new cabbage. In the Dallas Morning News. After a rain, especially, the garden lettuce is often very sandy, and sometimes the tender outside leaves are covered with mud, and if carelessly cleaned and washed, it not only loses its looks, but is not as crisp and tasty, and often the sand remains in the center.

The best way is to put the whole head in a pan of cold water, taking hold at the root end and plunging it up and down several times, then separate the leaves and put in plenty of fresh, cold water, let it stand for some time, lift out carefully and put in colander or wire lettuce strainer; look at it carefully that sand and salad lice are off. You may have to repeat two or three times. It is very unpleasant to find a little green speck crawling on the edge of the salad plate, and the only way to overcome it without crushing or hurting the lettuce is in handling it correctly.

While this is not celery season, there is still plenty in market which is good for salad and stewing. When using it for salad it should be well washed before cutting it into small pieces. Parsley should be carefully washed as soon as it is delivered, all water removed by shaking it, then put into a paper bag and placed in the refrigerator; it is much easier cut or chopped if taken care of in this way.

A word about asparagus, especially after a rain. One should be careful how it is washed. It should be put in a pan of cold water and plunged up and down so the sand which lodges in the tips will be removed without crushing the tips. New cabbage should be very carefully cleaned, as the early cabbage often has a small green worm, which sticks close to the cabbage, and sometimes water will not remove it; it should be cut away the same as had speck on cabbage. Radishes must be washed in plenty of water, then trimmed, before putting on the table.

How Five Chicago Teachers Solved the Problem of Hot Lunches.

In the July Woman's Home Companion appears a page devoted to half a dozen good ideas for the housekeeper, the school teacher and others. One contributor tells us follows how five Chicago school teachers made an arrangement by which they all could have hot lunches at small expense and with little trouble.

"Since the importance of a hot, nourishing luncheon at noon is well recognized, the only problem is how to get it. Five teachers in a suburban school near Chicago solved the problem.

"Instead of bothering with a luncheon every day, each teacher furnished the entire luncheon for five, one certain day in the week, and the mothers rejoiced. One hot dish, often more, was brought in the basket. The primary teacher who was free at eleven-thirty immediately went to the basement, unpacked a basket and set the pan of creamed potatoes or baked beans on the shelf of the furnace, where the food would be piping hot when needed. Steak was often broiled, and always there was a hot drink.

"An oil stove was used when there was no furnace fire. Each teacher brought her own plate, cup and saucer, spoon, knife and fork, which were washed in a few moments and left in a small cupboard near at hand.

"The arrangement was most satisfactory, and besides furnishing a hot, nourishing meal, eating comfortably at a table, it was a relief to the mothers to be free from all thought of luncheon except one day in the week."
